

Construction Litigation

Seigfreid Bingham's Construction Litigation practice centers on resolving disputes arising from construction projects, representing contractors, developers, property owners, architects, and engineers. Our team addresses complex legal issues that can emerge at any stage of a construction project, including contract disputes, defect claims, delay claims, payment issues, and warranty disputes.

Our construction litigators have a strong understanding of construction processes, technical standards, and the regulatory environment. If needed, our legal team works closely with experts in fields, including engineers, architects, and project managers, to build compelling cases.

When representing a client, we begin with a deep dive into each client's unique situation, which includes reviewing the facts and conducting a detailed analysis of relevant contracts, project documentation, and applicable laws. Our attorneys prioritize resolving disputes promptly and effectively through negotiation, mediation, or arbitration, minimizing costs and disruptions for clients. However, when necessary, the team is fully prepared to provide vigorous and unwavering advocacy in court.

Clear communication and strategic guidance are key when helping our clients confidently navigate legal disputes. Whether resolving conflicts through alternative dispute resolution or pursuing litigation, the goal is to protect the client's interests and keep their projects on schedule. With extensive experience in construction law, the firm serves as a trusted advisor in high-stakes disputes, delivering solutions tailored to the complexities of each case.
