Jordan May

Shareholder

As a member of the firm's litigation team, Jordan assists closely-held businesses and individuals in court and dispute resolution in a wide range of industries and matters, with special interest in employment law and representing small, local businesses. Jordan also represents clients in transportation, construction, and general business and corporate litigation disputes. While litigation can feel like a tangled web for business owners, Jordan prides herself on being relatable. She approaches each dispute with her client's goals in mind and works diligently to navigate through the litigation process to find the best resolution of the case. Jordan's clients appreciate her ability to listen and understand their problems and concerns, and provide straightforward advice. Jordan joined the legal profession with intent on being a hard fighting advocate for her clients and voicing their story. In her free time, Jordan can be found running, reading, cheering on the Chiefs, and spending time with her husband, daughter, and dogs.
