

John Neyens and Colby Stone Present to Missouri Primary Care Association on Responding to Subpoenas for Protected Health Information

Seigfreid Bingham attorneys John Neyens and Colby Stone recently presented to compliance officers from the Missouri Primary Care Association (MO-PCA) during one of the organization's compliance meetings.

After Seigfreid Bingham published a Client Alert on responding to subpoenas involving protected health information, the Missouri Primary Care Association invited our attorneys to present the topic to its members' compliance officers.

The presentation focused on best practices for responding to subpoenas involving protected health information (PHI), a topic that has become increasingly important for healthcare organizations navigating privacy and compliance obligations.

During the session, the John and Colby discussed key considerations healthcare providers should evaluate when responding to subpoenas, including compliance with privacy regulations, risk mitigation strategies, and practical response procedures. Attendees were highly engaged throughout the presentation, participating in a robust question-and-answer discussion focused on real-world compliance challenges.

The presentation reflects Seigfreid Bingham's ongoing commitment to helping health care providers navigate complex regulatory and compliance issues through thought leadership, practical legal guidance, and industry-focused education. For more information about Seigfreid Bingham's Health Care Law practice, please contact John Neyens, Colby Stone, or any of our Health Care attorneys.